There is a real possibility that Britain could vote to leave the EU on June 23rd. Ben Bradshaw will talk about the referendum campaign so far, on the arguments that have been used for staying in the EU and for leaving it, and on the implications for Britain, Europe and the rest of the world of either result.

Ben Bradshaw has been MP for Exeter since 1997. Between 2001 and 2010 he served as a Minister in a number of departments including Health, the Foreign Office, Environment Food and Rural Affairs and, from 2009 to 2010, as Secretary of State in the Cabinet for Culture Media and Sport.

This lecture is part of the summer 2016 series “The Future of the UK: Between Internal and External Divisions”.

Everyone is welcome to attend.
