The lecture will explore the historical background to the drafting and publication of Magna Carta, focusing in particular on the contribution of the laity – earls, barons, and knights, burgesses and freemen – to the formation of the political programme of the rebels and to the articulation of this programme in that most famous and most iconic of documents.

Dr Hugh Doherty is Lecturer in Medieval History at the University of East Anglia and specialises on charters and historical narratives of the twelfth century.

Everyone is welcome to attend.
