In this lecture Professor Helen Cowie will speak about how aspects of xenophobia and xenophilia have played out following the Brexit referendum vote in Britain.

Helen Cowie is Emerita Professor of Health and Social Care at the University of Surrey and acts as research supervisor for Regent's University. She is Fellow of the British Psychological Society and joint Chair of the European Network for Social and Emotional Competence (ENSEC). Her work focuses on child development and young people, in particular on the promotion of emotional competence and well-being, and she has specialized and widely published in the area of school-bullying, including cyberbullying and strategies on how to counteract them. Her most recent publication is the co-edited volume (with Carrie-Anne Myers) Bullying Among University Students: Cross National Perspectives, Routledge, 2015. Her forthcoming edited book is Bullying in Schools: Interventions and Prevention, to be published by Routledge in 2017.
