European Academy Berlin

On March 29, the British Government officially declared its intention to withdraw from the EU. This momentous decision seems to fit a pessimistic narrative of a Europe in crisis. The rise of anti-European parties, seemingly autocratic governments, economic and social struggles, high numbers of incoming refugees and various security threats have challenged the support of the people and politicians towards the European project. And yet, an increasing number of observers discusses Brexit as a chance for deeper European integration. In light of these developments, the panel evaluates the implication of Brexit for the future of the EU and its remaining member states.

The event is organised by the European Academy of Berlin in cooperation with the Centre for British Studies, Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin and cordially supported by the Federal Foreign Office.
